

New Classes of Multiferroic Materials

Naresh Dalal, Raghav Samantaray, Prashant Jain, Harry Kroto, Tony Cheetham¹

Florida State University, Tallahassee, Florida State University

1. Cambridge University , Cambridge, U.K.

Development of multiferroic materials, compounds whose properties can be controlled by two different thermodynamic variables, such as electric and magnetic fields, are of high interest in current research in materials science. We will present data showing how we rendered ferroelectricity in a magnetic compound, and magnetism in a ferroelectric material. Some future challenges will be discussed.